Being a pen-pal enables people to create meaningful connections with people they would not usually come into contact with. It allows people to expand their worldview and have a supportive friendship.

You will not need to set aside volunteer hours and will be able to choose to connect when it suits you.

Having a pen-pal can be a transformative experience for people who are incarcerated.

Having friendship and support from people outside of prison enables incarcerated people to feel connected to the outside world and feel hope for their future.

Volunteers will be supported by a paid volunteer co-ordinator and receive professional training before being deployed in the community and ongoing development once they're in the field.
